On Inflation...

By Mary Jo Fahey
March 4, 2017

Many people do not understand that there was relatively little inflation before 1913. Inflation calculators on the Web begin in that year, see: http://www.usinflationcalculator.com. An article on the U.S. Inflation Calculator site says a government report on February 15, 2017 shows a U.S. inflation increase in January as highest in almost five years. The inflation calculator and the graph on this page show the cumulative rate of inflation since 1913 is 2352.9%. As you can see from the graph on this page, most of that increase has been since 1940. The United States has had three central banks. The most recent central bank was created when The Federal Reserve Act was signed into law by President Woodrow Wilson on December 23, 1913. The steep incline in the graph roughly corresponds to a Sirian invasion that has accelerated in the last 30 years. Prices spiral upward because Sirians give themselves away. They play a game as old as empire, but one that has been on the planet since July 2011. They are not in control. I get the impression that the three were involved in the first Sirian projects to create artificial life. Their tools included fraudulent financial reports, rigged elections, payoffs, extortion, and murder. They feed on the water utility resulted in higher prices. I remember reading that Bolivians were paying more for water than they were for food. There was an uprising and a 17 year-old boy was shot, see: “Leasing the Rain: The world is running out of fresh water, and the fight to control it has begun,” April 8, 2002, http://www.newyorker.com/magazine/2002/04/08/leasing-the-rain. I remember thinking it was unusual for this type of international news to be published in an American magazine. I used to rely on a British magazine called The Ecologist for reports about what was happening outside the United States. I used to buy the magazine at Barnes & Noble. In 2009, the magazine suddenly disappeared from the store's magazine department. I thought it was out-of-stock, or sold-out and later learned that the publication stopped their print edition in July 2009, see: http://www.theecologist.org. This is a crisis because it appears it is a Sirian intention to eliminate all brick and mortar retail stores.

Confessions of an Economic Hit Man

Author John Perkins provides a behind-the-scenes look at how poor countries of the world can be talked into giving up their water utilities (and other natural resources) in his Confessions of an Economic Hit Man. Perkins’ book was published by Berrett-Koehler Publishers (John Wiley & Sons) in 2004. He describes economic hit men (EHMs) as:

Highly paid professionals who cheat countries around the globe out of trillions of dollars. They funnel money from the World Bank, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), and other foreign “aid” organizations into the coffers of huge corporations and the pockets of a few wealthy families who control the planet’s natural resources. Their tools included fraudulent financial reports, rigged elections, payoffs, extortion, sex, and murder. They play a game as old as empire, but one that has taken on new and terrifying dimensions during this time of globalization.

Perkins spoke in Madison, Wisconsin, but I missed his talk. A friend of mine who saw him speak said a microphone was set up for audience members to ask questions at the end of Perkins’ presentation. One of the audience members said they thought “Jesus could help.” It’s been 13 years, and Jesus has not helped…

Author Barbara Ehrenreich investigated the working poor for her book Nickel and Dimed: On (Not) Getting By in America published by Metropolitan Books (Macmillan/ Holtzbrinck Publishing Group) in 2001. Working as a undercover journalist, Barbara investigated the impact of the 1996 welfare reform act on the working poor in the United States between the Spring of 1998 and Summer of 2000. Barbara left her home, took the cheapest lodgings she could find, and accepted whatever jobs she was offered moving from Florida to Maine to Minnesota. She worked as a waitress, a hotel maid, a cleaning woman, a nursing-home aide, and a Wal-Mart sales clerk. She lived in trailer parks and crumbling residential motels. I can remember reading that she found it was impossible to find a place to live for less than $650 per month.

Robbing the World’s Poor of National Resources

In 2002, I noticed an article in The New Yorker magazine about a water crisis in Bolivia. Privatization of the water utility resulted in higher prices. I remember reading that Bolivians were paying more for water than they were for food. There was an uprising and a 17 year-old boy was shot, see: “Leasing the Rain: The world is running out of fresh water, and the fight to control it has begun,” April 8, 2002, http://www.newyorker.com/magazine/2002/04/08/leasing-the-rain. I remember thinking it was unusual for this type of international news to be published in an American magazine. I used to rely on a British magazine called The Ecologist for reports about what was happening outside the United States. I used to buy the magazine at Barnes & Noble. In 2009, the magazine suddenly disappeared from the store's magazine department. I thought it was out-of-stock, or sold-out and later learned that the publication stopped their print edition in July 2009, see: http://www.theecologist.org. This is a crisis because it appears it is a Sirian intention to eliminate all brick and mortar retail stores.

Warfare, the Road to Globalization

In 2005, I found an author named Deanna Spingola who wrote an article titled, “Warfare, the Road to Globalization,” see: http://www.spingola.com/earthsroad.pdf. Deanna says international bankers own the central banks in every country of the world except for seven (in 2005). She explains that the U.S. State Dept. defines “rogue nations” as any nation that harbors of supports terrorists. What’s quite amazing in her article is that the rogue nations of the world are the same countries that do not allow international bankers to control their central banks. In 2005, the list included Afghanistan, Iran, Iraq, Libya, Cuba, North Korea, and Sudan. Today, a (Google) list includes: Iran, Sudan, Syria, Cuba, Iraq, Libya, North Korea and South Yemen.

Are There Banking Families Who Are Responsible?

In his Thrive video, Foster Gamble wants us to believe that Earth’s Illuminati are responsible for the planet’s problems. When I dowse the question, “Are there Illuminati families?” The response is “Yes.” When I ask, “Are these the banking families?” The response is “Yes.” And, “Is this group entirely responsible for Earth’s problems?” The response is “No.” I wove the names of the Illuminati families into Untitled Faction, Part 2, see: http://articles.x10.mx/untitled_faction_part_2_11_15_15.pdf. For the past 2 years, I’ve known that there are a group of 3 male Sirians at the top of Earth’s Sirian hierarchy who have been on the planet since July 2011. They are not uploaded versions of any of the Ennead family members. This group is here also—but they are not in control. I get the impression that the three were involved in the first Sirian projects to create artificial life. Their intention is to create a world that is entirely artificial. It does make sense that the multi-pronged attack that we see on Earth could only be achieved with technology. They have created a mess, and if God does not intervene, the mess will get worse.